FROM INFLUENCE TO INVOLVEMENT.

A customer relationship worth building.

STRATEGY / COMMUNITY / CREATIVE DIRECTION

01 / THE PERSPECTIVE

Rhode knows how to make people want in.

My question is what happens once they are already customers.

Rhode has built a distinctive visual world around product desire, cultural relevance, and Hailey Bieber's influence. That is not the problem I want to solve. It is the advantage I want to build on.

The opportunity, as I see it, is to turn that attention into a more participatory relationship with the people purchasing and using the products.

02 / THE EXISTING EQUITY

The identity isn’t broken.

The proposal should not dilute the reasons Rhode is recognizable.

01

Founder-led relevance

Hailey’s visibility and cultural influence give Rhode a distinctive way to enter conversations.

02

A coherent visual world

Product photography, restrained styling, and recurring visual codes make the brand immediately recognizable.

03

A focused product philosophy

Rhode publicly emphasizes intentional essentials, everyday use, and formulations that earn their place in a routine.

03 / THE QUESTION

Access is not the same thing as participation.

Influencer marketing can create attention. But access to a founder, a launch, or an early product should not depend only on someone's audience size.

This is a proposal to expand customer participation. It is not a claim that Rhode does not already conduct customer research.

THE QUESTION

What if Rhode made its paying customers active contributors—not simply the audience for its next campaign?

THE BIG IDEA

A place in Rhode that customers can actually shape.

A verified-customer community inside Rhode's existing website—built for dialogue, product insight, rewards, and real-world access.

04 / PRINCIPLES

The community needs standards, not just aesthetics.

01

Verified, not viral

Purchase verification establishes eligibility. A follower count does not grant special standing.

02

Honest, not polished

Customers can challenge product choices openly. The brand responds without erasing constructive criticism.

03

Useful, not performative

Feedback should move toward review, testing, decisions, or a transparent explanation of why it cannot.

05 / PARTICIPATION

A voice for everyone who buys.
More ways to participate over time.

EVERY VERIFIED CUSTOMER

Submit ideas. Join discussions. Vote on relevant proposals. Attend open digital sessions. Access clear updates.

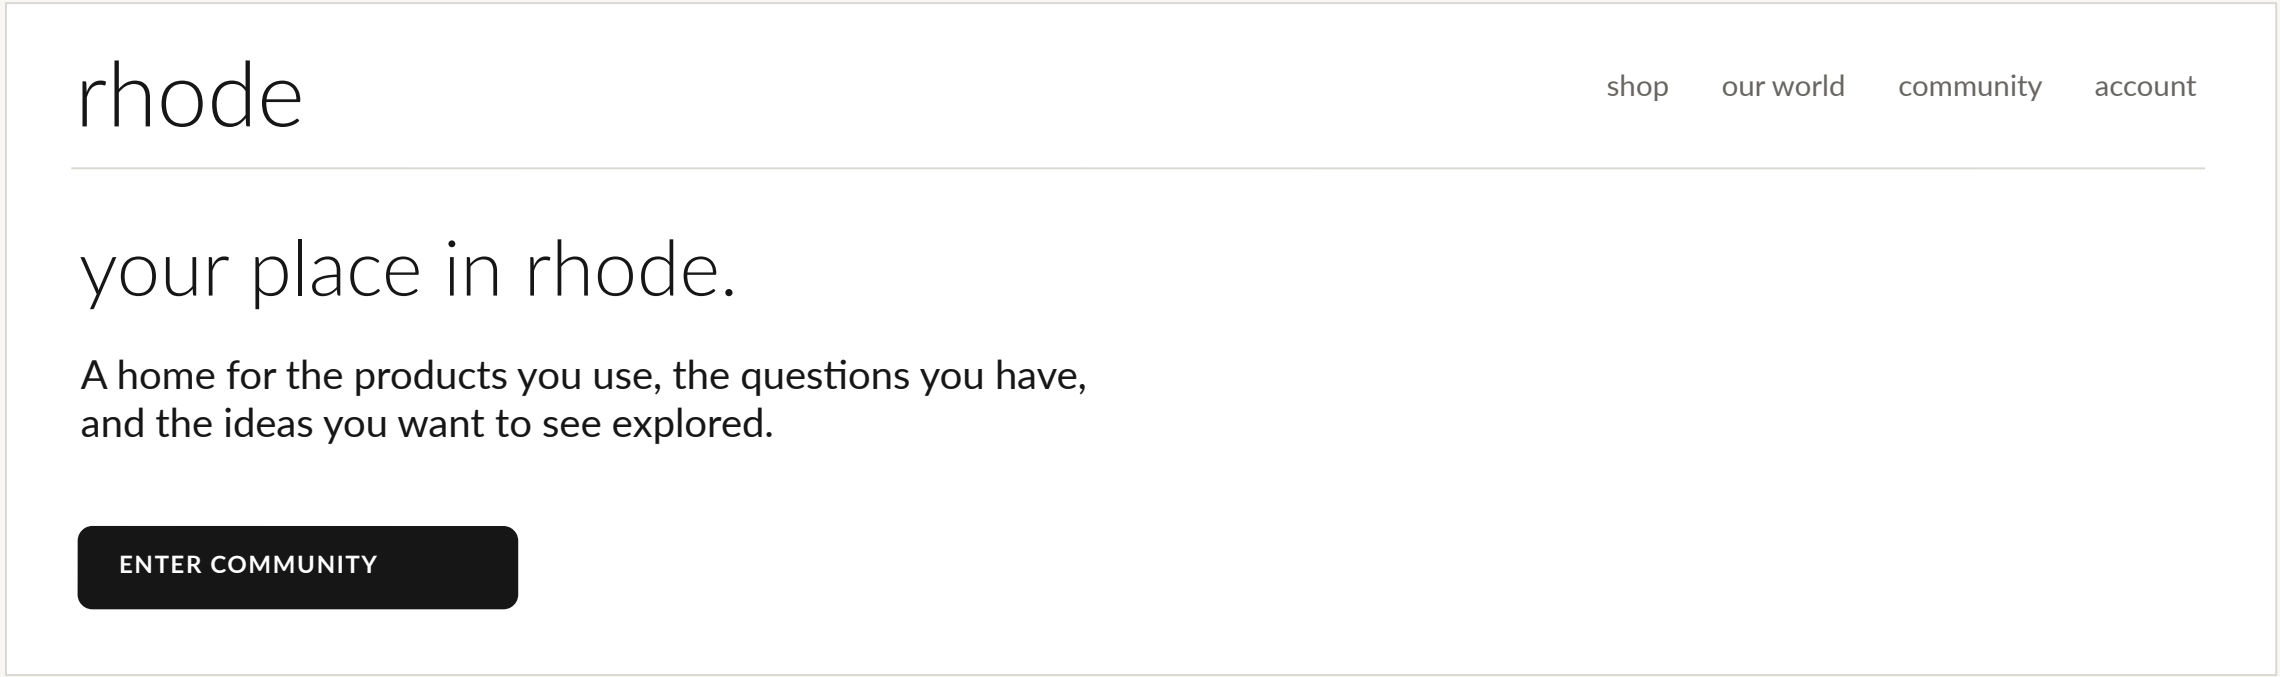

ENGAGED MEMBERS

Qualify for selected product trials, priority invitations, loyalty benefits, and more involved research opportunities.

A proposed 70/30 or 80/20 mix can be piloted for event invitations or testing places—not as a rule that higher spend makes feedback more valid.

06 / WEBSITE CONCEPT

It belongs inside Rhode.

CONCEPTUAL UI — NOT AN EXISTING RHODE FEATURE

07 / FOUR FUNCTIONS

The experience has to do more than collect comments.

01 ASK

Live founder and team Q&As, archived for members who cannot attend.

02 SHAPE

Requests, concept feedback, community voting, and clear status updates.

03 TEST

Application-based, safe and inclusive prototype trials with structured feedback.

04 BELONG

Benefits, customer gatherings, creative workshops, and access beyond launches.

08A / DIGITAL EXPERIENCE

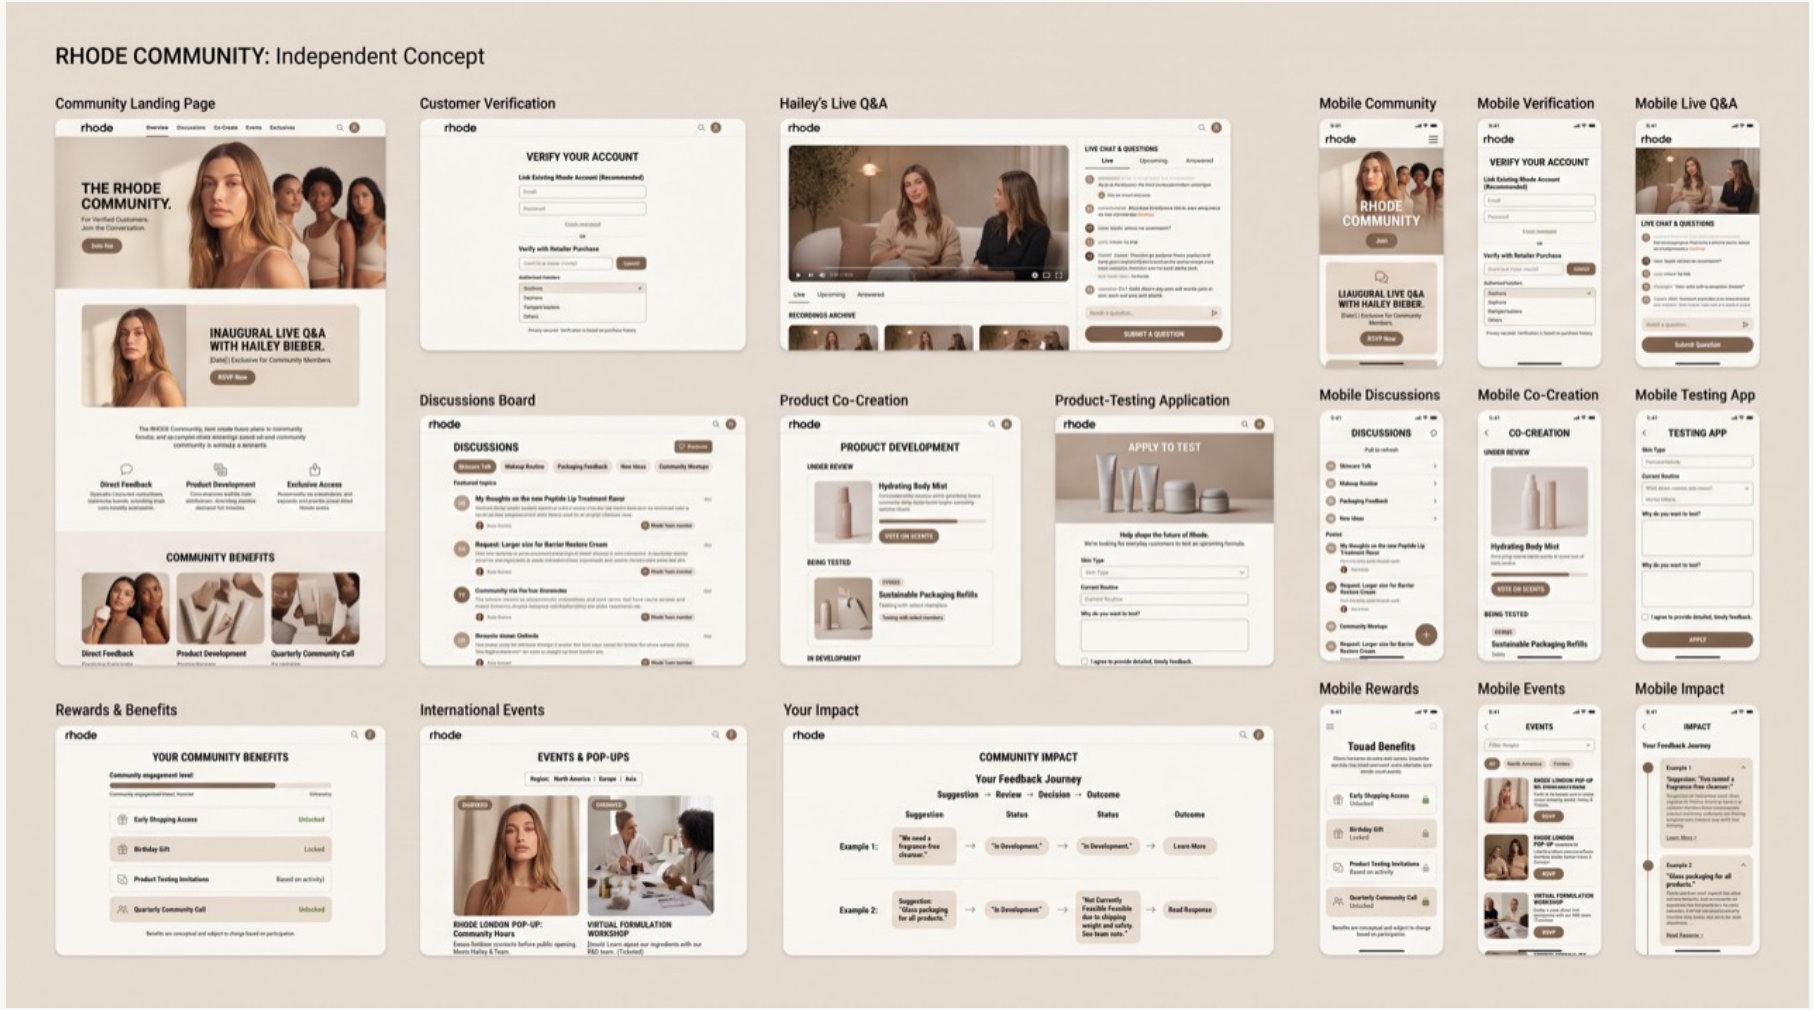

The community ecosystem.

Turning customer participation into something people can actually see, use, and return to.

The proposed hub connects conversations, product suggestions, testing applications, rewards, and events. Desktop and mobile explorations show how these functions could belong to one customer relationship, rather than isolated campaign moments.

Digital participation should connect to real-world experiences. Invitations and product trials would need transparent eligibility, moderation, privacy safeguards, and a feasible operating model before any pilot.

08A / CONCEPT INTERFACE

Early exploration of a customer-centered Rhode digital ecosystem.

08B / DIGITAL EXPERIENCE

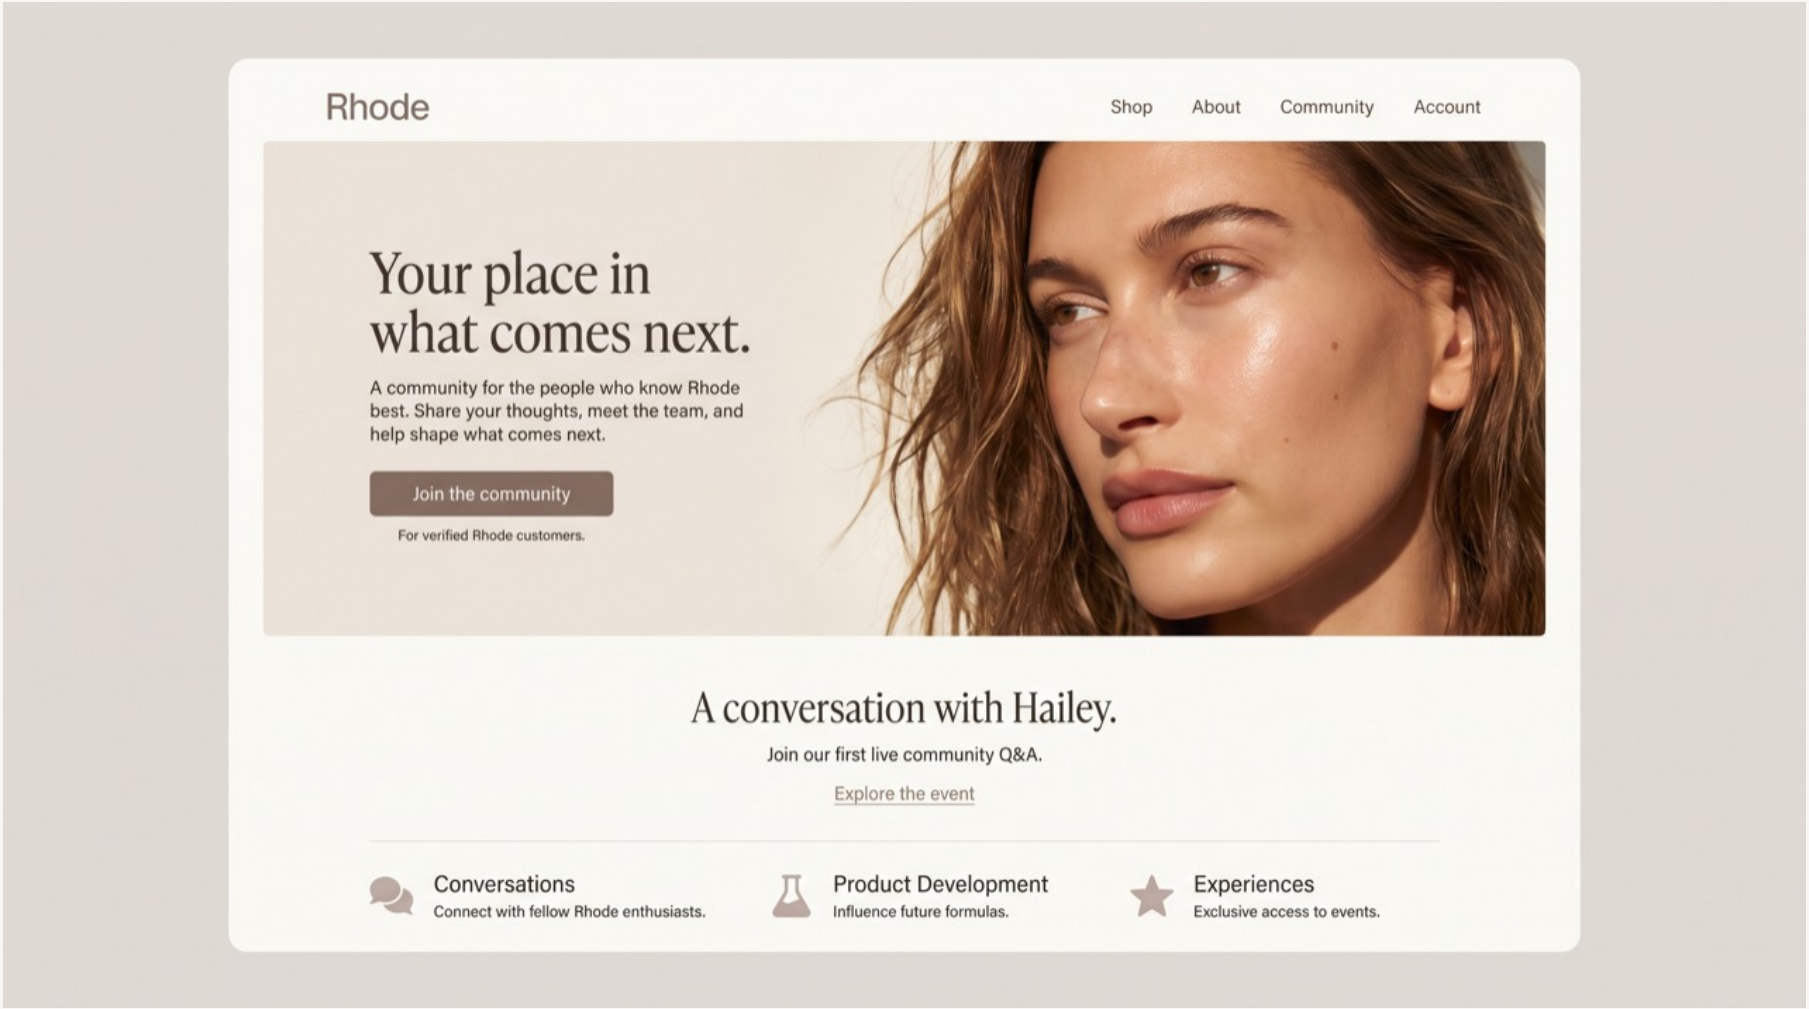

A place within Rhode.

The invitation should feel like part of the brand.

A dedicated community entry within Rhode's existing website introduces a customer-first proposition: share thoughts, meet the team, and help shape what comes next. The landing page gives participation a recognizable home and a reason to return.

Warm neutrals, clean typography, restrained layouts, and Rhode-inspired imagery extend the existing identity. The interface is a proposed direction, not a replacement brand or an implemented product.

08B / CONCEPT INTERFACE

A dedicated space for the people who know Rhode best.

08C / DIGITAL EXPERIENCE

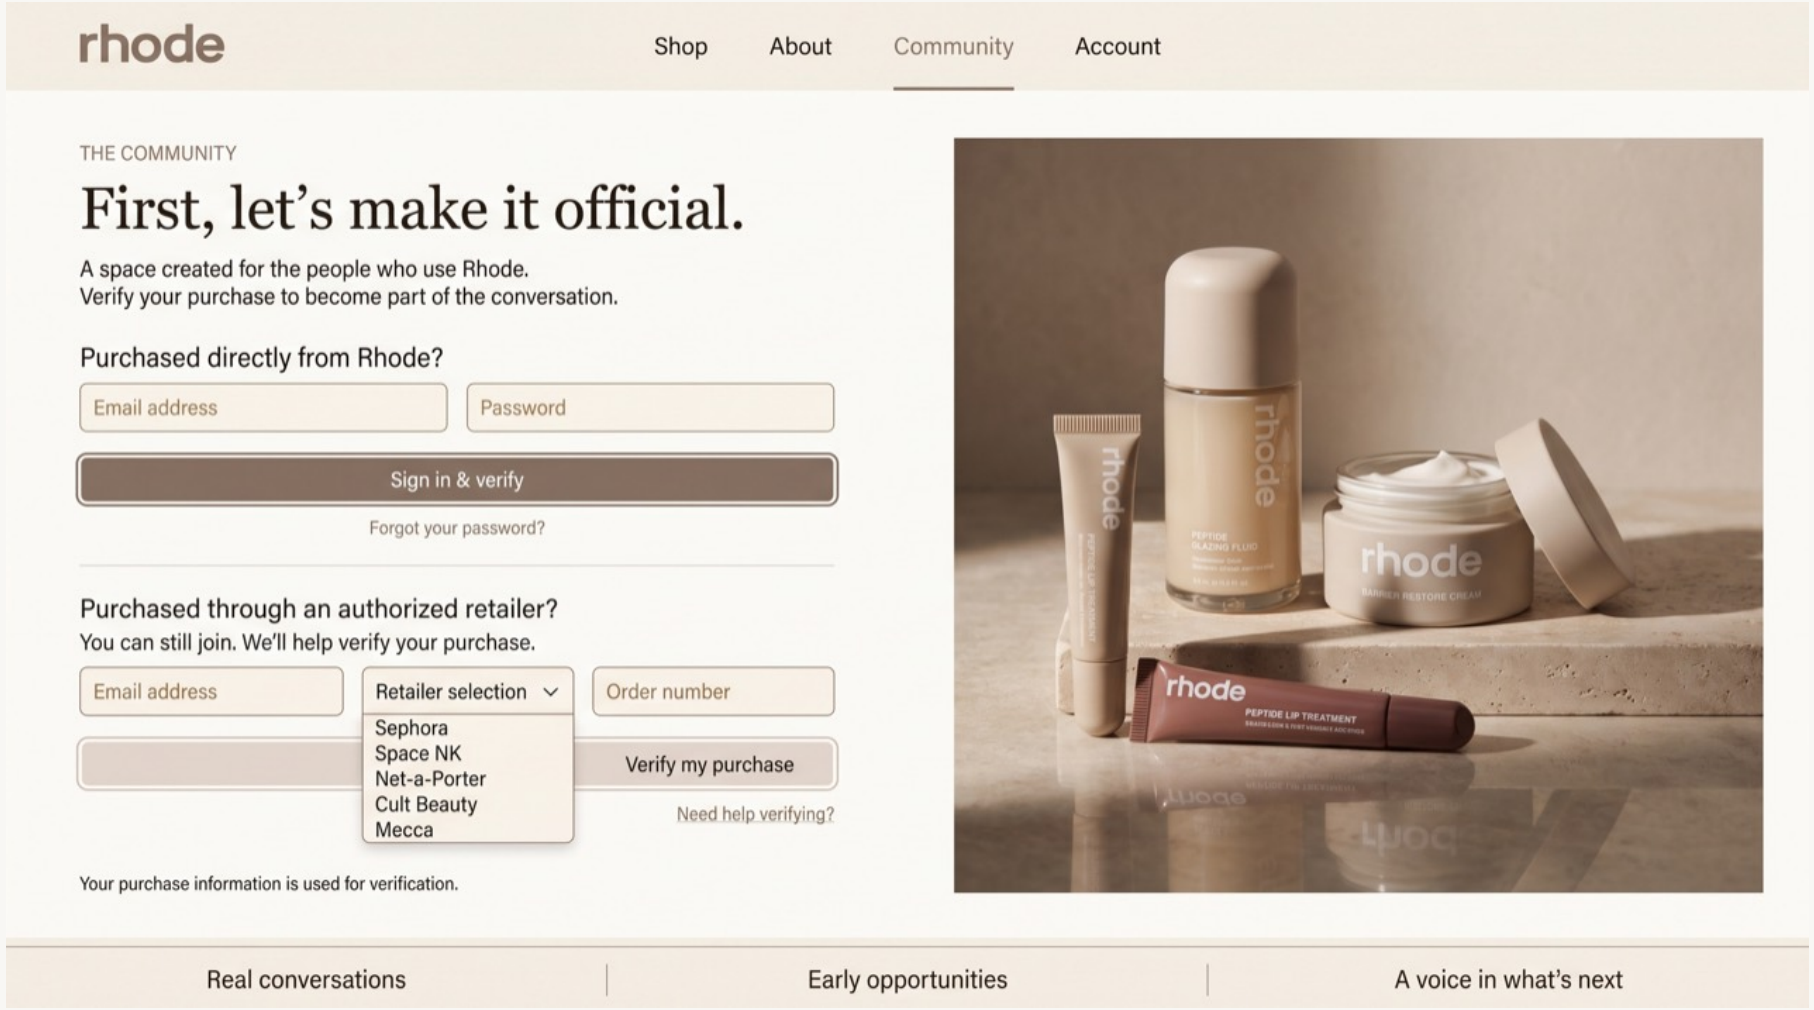

Access based on customership.

Eligibility begins with a relationship to the products, not an audience size.

The concept proposes checking a direct purchase through an existing account, with a separate route for authorized-retailer customers. Both paths would establish eligibility without making follower count the price of access.

Verification must be practical and proportionate. Retailer integrations, proof requirements, data handling, accessibility, and support would need validation; the retailer names and form states shown here are illustrative.

08C / CONCEPT INTERFACE

Membership begins with a genuine relationship to the brand.

08D / DIGITAL EXPERIENCE

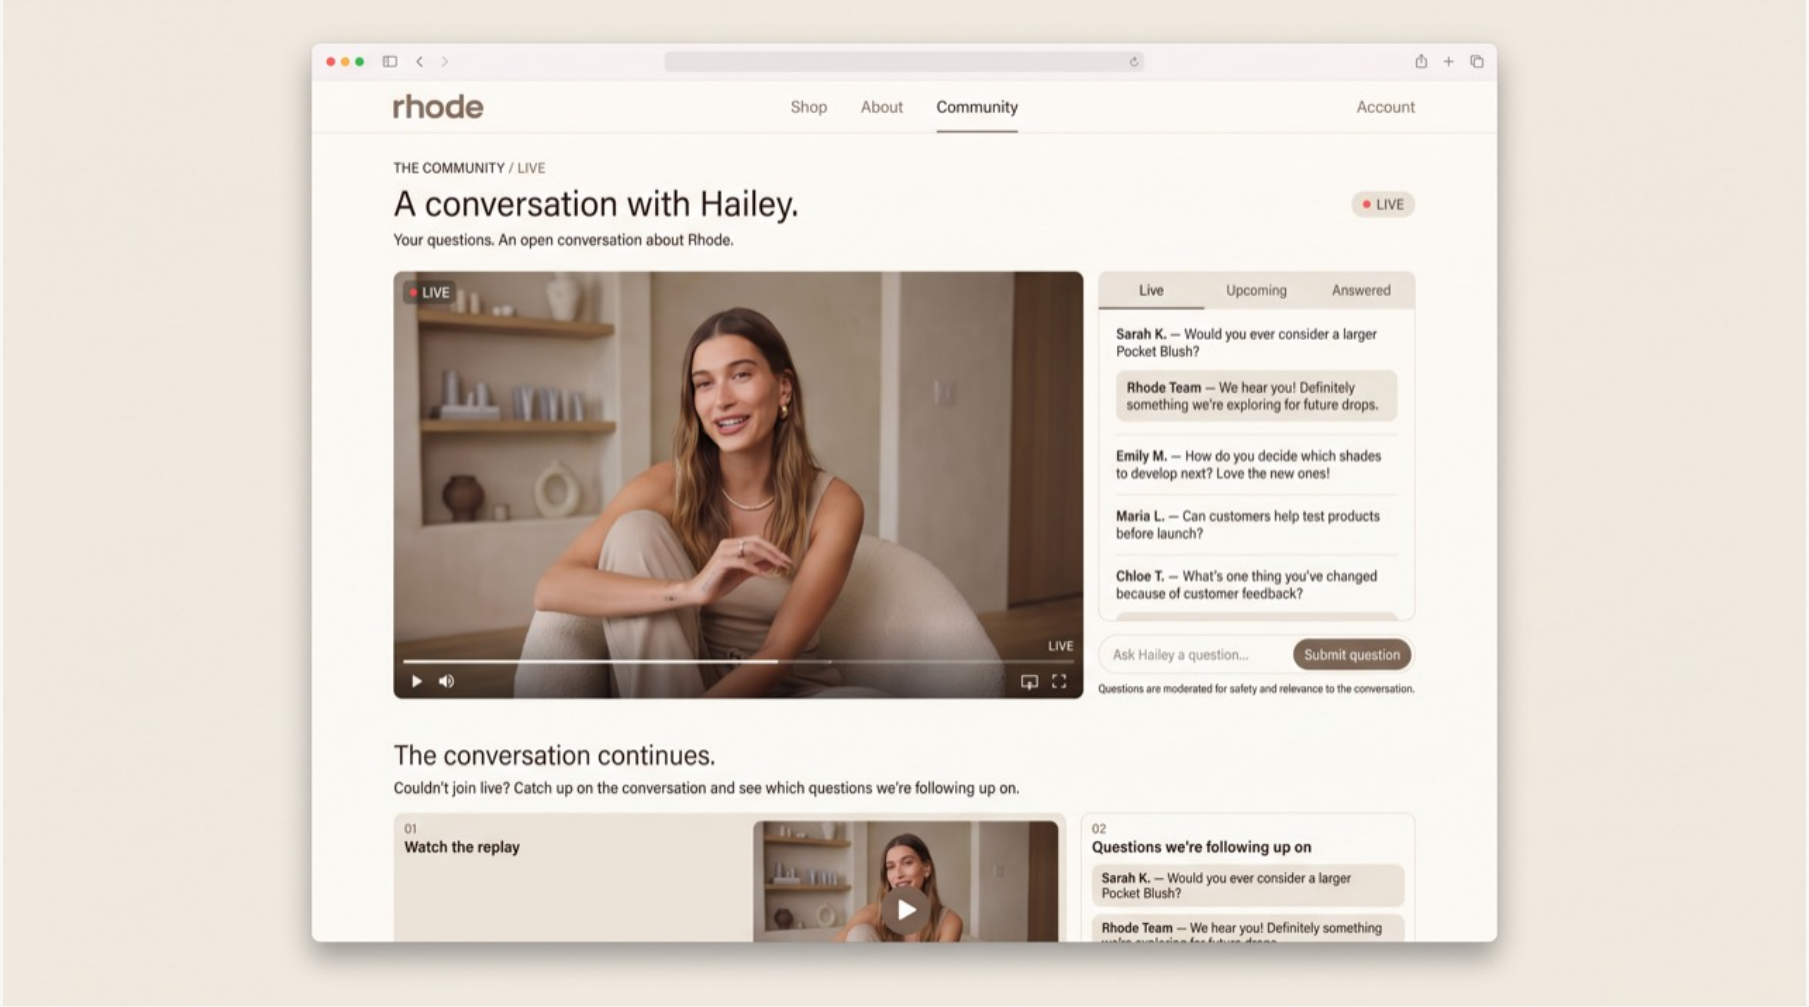

A conversation with Hailey.

The first event should demonstrate the relationship being proposed.

An inaugural live Q&A; would let verified customers ask Hailey and the Rhode team questions directly. Active moderation should support constructive disagreement and honest answers, including what the team cannot answer yet.

A replay and visible follow-up list make the conversation useful beyond its live moment. This is a proposed event format, not a confirmed appearance or a produced film; every displayed question and response is conceptual.

08D / CONCEPT INTERFACE

A more direct conversation between Hailey and Rhode's customers.

08E / DIGITAL EXPERIENCE

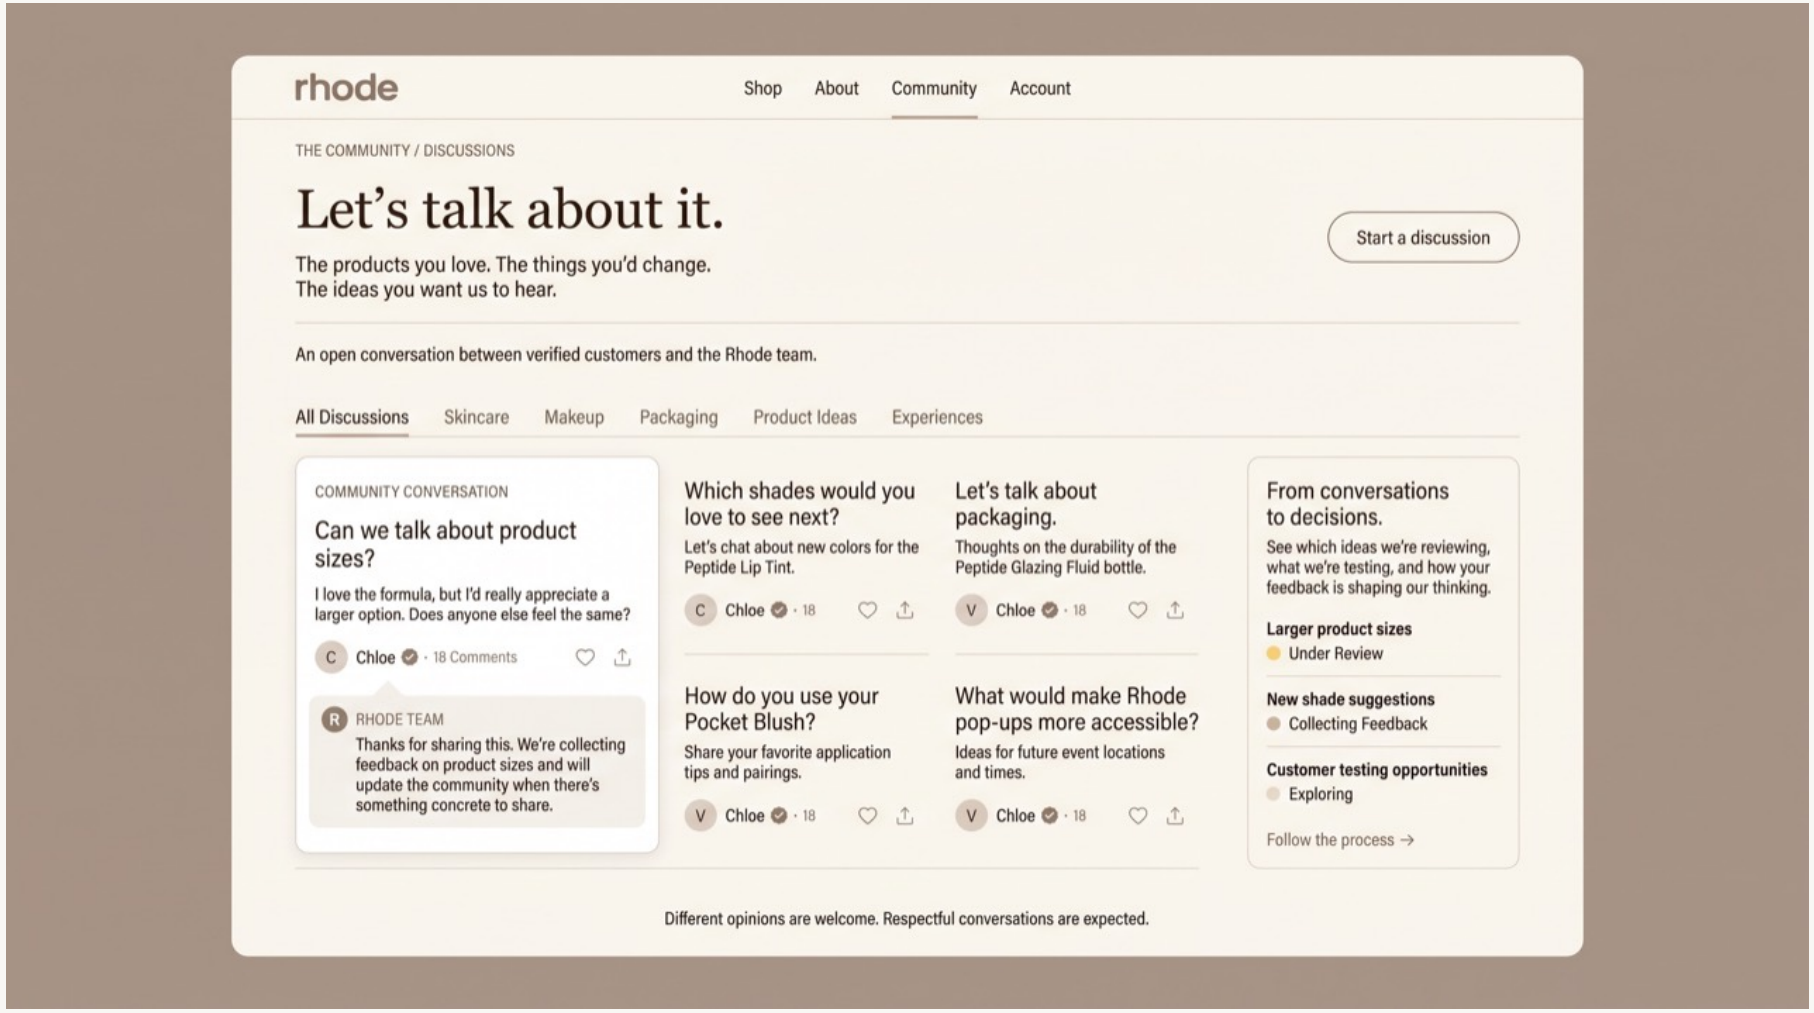

Conversations that lead somewhere.

Listening becomes credible when people can see the follow-through.

The discussion space would keep criticism, suggestions, and team responses visible. Members could discuss products, packaging, experiences, and new ideas, while moderation maintains respectful conversation without requiring polished praise.

A progress view connects feedback to review, testing, and decisions. Not every suggestion becomes a product: the team should explain what is being explored, what needs more work, and why some proposals do not move forward.

08E / CONCEPT INTERFACE

Customer feedback should lead to conversation—and visible follow-through.

09 / LAUNCH MOMENT

Lead with a live conversation.

HAILEY, LIVE.

The first community experience should be a live Q&A for verified customers, led by Hailey and supported by the Rhode team.

Questions come from members, with live follow-ups and active moderation. There is room for disagreement, uncertainty, and answers that are not ready yet.

Recordings and unanswered questions remain accessible afterward. The first event establishes a recurring promise, not a one-day stunt.

10/ CAMPAIGN DIRECTION

Make the invitation feel real.

Not another perfect speech.

ONE CAMERA. ONE CONVERSATION. ONE INVITATION.

MY DIRECTION

Hailey introduces the community herself, plainly and directly. No staged crowd reactions. No manufactured emotional montage. Show the invitation, then let customers experience whether it is sincere.

This is a proposed creative treatment—not footage that has been produced.

11 / TRUST MECHANISM

People should see what happens after they speak.

01

SUBMITTED

Customer requests a larger Pocket Blush.

02

UNDER REVIEW

Rhode acknowledges demand and evaluates feasibility.

03

IN TESTING

Selected customers trial an approved prototype.

04

DECIDED

Rhode explains the outcome—even if the answer is no.

Illustrative process only. Product feasibility, formulation, quality, and safety decisions remain with qualified Rhode teams.

12 / PHYSICAL EXPERIENCE

The community should exist in the real world, too.

01

Customer-first pop-ups

A mix of invitation pathways, including long-term members and newer customers. Some experiences free; paid workshops only where appropriate.

02

Make & explore

Creative workshops around packaging ideas, shade exploration, and product storytelling—not just photo opportunities.

03

Inside development

Supervised, safety-approved product-development demonstrations and customer testing sessions, potentially involving Hailey or the team.

International activations would follow demonstrated customer demand, legal feasibility, local partnerships, and distribution readiness—not arbitrary expansion promises.

13/ PROPOSED ROLLOUT

Start with credibility. Earn the right to expand.

PHASE 01

VALIDATE

Customer discovery, purchase-verification design, privacy, pilot rules, moderation, and rewards economics.

PHASE 02

OPEN

Launch the member hub and live founder Q&A. Publish the first visible feedback updates.

PHASE 03

PROVE

Pilot structured product trials, transparent decision statuses, and measured benefits.

PHASE 04

EXPAND

Introduce customer-led physical experiences and select international pilots where warranted.

14 / MEASUREMENT

There isn’t one metric for being worth listening to.

01

Participation

Verified enrollment, active participants, live Q&A attendance, return visits, and diversity of customer input.

02

Trust & usefulness

Customer-reported feeling of being heard, feedback-response times, and proposals that receive a visible decision.

03

Commercial signals

Retention, repeat purchase behavior, and event uptake—compared carefully with appropriate baselines.

All metrics are proposed measures for a hypothetical pilot. This independent study makes no claim of implementation or achieved results.

MY CONCLUSION

Rhode doesn't need more attention. It could do more with the attention it already has.

The idea isn't to replace influence. It's to make involvement part of what Rhode stands for.

RESEARCH NOTES

A proposal, not a claim of work done for Rhode.

This is an independent, speculative strategy and creative-direction study by Sarah Safwan. It is not commissioned, endorsed, partnered with, or implemented by Rhode or Hailey Bieber. Community interfaces, event formats, and campaign concepts are illustrative proposals.
